The Frees and the Labor Troubles. The attitude of the press during the labor troubles which have disturbed the country ought not to escape notice. It is a reminder to employers of the Jay Gould so long silent that I think I owe you an

In the Southwestern frombes the men on strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer a man who is not a professional agitator, though the interests of his order require his whole time and he is paid a salary for his services; who is not an extremist; who has been endeavoring to preserve the peace and to compose the difficulties rather than to aggravate them. It would have been still more fortunate for the railroad strikers if they had asked Mr. Powderly's advice before they struck; failing that, if they had taken his advice after they did strike. Mr. Powderly has had strong backing from the press in his efforts to bring Mr. Gould to consent to a reasonable sattlems in through arbitration.

The press has condenued the double play of Mr. Gould and the arrogance of Mr. Hoxie. Appreciating the embarass-

Mr. Hoxie. Appreciating the embarassments under which Mr. Powderly labors, the press criticised him only mildly, when he said that right or wrong the strike ought to be maintained now that it was on. This did not sound like the wise and conservative Powderly, and if this one utterance had been disconnected from all his other utterances and acts, it would have deserved, and doubtless would have received, different treatment. But the press recognized all that Mr. Powderly had attempted in the right direction, realized what he had to contend with from within and without, and had so little sympathy with the Gould tactics, that it was not driven from Mr. Powderly's support because it thought that for once he had gone wrong.

In a careful reading of a large exchange list, representing all sections of the country and all currents of thought, the INTELLICENCER_is convinced that workingmen have a strong friend in the press. We speak, of course, of so much of the press as owns itself, controls its own opinions and does not hesitate to express them in such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far support because in the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far support because the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far support because the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far support because the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far support because the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far Mr. Hoxie. Appreciating the embarase ments under which Mr. Powderly labors, be the truths. They will not profess a special friendship for the workingman over the capitalist, except as the workingmen may have right on his side, as he may suffer by reason of oppression, or have some other claim to special consider-

The aim of a free press ought to be to counsel justice, moderation, forbearance, between all the elements of a community, that business relations may be friendly, social relations unstrained, and the gen-eral welfare promoted. This is the course pursued by newspapers of character. Those that go the other way represent only so much good white paper speiled by good black ink. They are in no proper sense part of that mighty estate called

An Administration of Baffling Mysteries.

An Administration of Haffing Mysteries.

It has been a hard pull for the Mugwump newspapers. They have struggled manfully against fate, and they have not been able to hold out. Observe this, for example, from the New York Times:

Mr. John R. McLean has a peculiarly pleasant and influential position in Arserican politics. He wins, whoever loses, Had Mr. Blaine been elected President in 1884 he would have been only too glad to make over the Clincinnati Postofiles to Mr. McLean in payment for the campaign services of himself and his newspaper, Mr. Cleveland, who was elected President in the nature of things we are unable to say whether Mr. Blaine, if he had been elected, would have made over the Clinclinnati Postofiles to Johnny McLean. We think he would not, though we are no prepared to deny that Johnny never sid prefer the election of Mr. Cleveland and never did take pains to conceal his preference. Mr. Blaine might have thought it reward enough for Johnny to have the proud conscioueness that he had contributed in a quiet way to elevating the first American stateeman of his time to the highest of all public stations, incomparably above that of any king, prince or potentiate on the earth.

The point of the Times criticism is not the irrelevant suggestion touching what Mr. Blaine might have done, but the deeraration that "Mr. Cleveland has actually ione this," and that the why of it is "on of the most bariling mysteries of his Ad ministration." Thus the discussion is lifted from particulars to a general proposition, namely, that this is an Adminis tration of "bailling mysteries."

The declaration being made in connec tion with a scandalous appointment, the fair inference is that the happy phrase "battling mysterlea" refers to the other scandalous appointments made by the Administration. Certainly a newspaper cannot be thought unkind which mildly characterizes as a "bailling mys tery" an appointment which shocks the moral sense of a community and flies in the face of the President's pledges,

Really there is no mystery about it The President desires to be a good Democrat and a reformer in whom there is no guile, and it is not altogether his fault that he cannot make ends meet. Oil and water do not mix, but there is no "bailling mystery" about that.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

labor troubles which have disturbed the country ought not to excape notice. It is a reminder to employers of the Jay Gould class that they are not to expect the support of the press in any effort they may make to take an unfair advantage of men in their employ. It is a reminder to men who work for wages that in any peaceful effort they make to secure a redress of grievances they will have the sympathy and co-operation of the press.

There are, it is true, a few newspapers which express no sympathy for the millions who toil, and probably have none, being directed by men who never knew what it is to get down to the hard pan of life, or who, in their own success, have forgotten that other men are still strue. For the most part they have given a fair hearing to the toilers and wished them Godspeed in every movement to secure justice.

They do not, perhaps, go to the extreme that would satisfy the professional labor a gitators, whose business it is toa-see but one side of a question, set employers and employees by the ears and divide communities on artificial class lines. But it is possible that the true cause of labor has friends who are as sincere and as wise and as capable of benefitting the cause as those who live by agitation.

In the Southwestern troubles the men on strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer s man who is not a professional agitator, though the intera professional agitator, though the intera professional agitator, though the internon strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer s man who is not a professional agitator, though the intera professional agitator, though the intera professional agitator, though the internon strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer s man who is not a professional agitator, though the internon strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer s man who is not a professional agitator, though the internon strike have had the good fortune to have for chief officer s man who is not since an approach and does not hesitate to express them in such ways and at such times as it thinks right; and this part of the press is by far the greater part.

Newspapers of this character will not always say the thing which workingmen may desire to hear. They may utter unwelcome thoughts, believing them to the truths. They will not profess a local profess a local profess a local profess. The mother of another of my guests sleeps under the tall trees by the shores of Naini Al, among the Himalaya mountains.
